

ABSTRACT

Systems and methods are provided that can be utilized to estimate power associated with a circuit design. The estimated power is determined by employing power characterizations associated with dynamic and static power related parameters of a circuit design. The power characterizations can be determined prior to circuit design optimizations, stored and utilized during circuit design optimizations.